Greg is an experienced and pioneering litigator, representing clients in bench and jury trials across the country in the full range of trademark, copyright, and patent disputes for over 20 years. Greg's practice focuses primarily on trademark, patent, trade secret, and complex civil litigation matters.

After filing the first in rem domain name lawsuits and testifying on behalf of Porsche before the World Intellectual Property Organization on the threat to the rights of famous trademark holders posed by cybersquating, Greg was invited by Senator Orrin Hatch to assist in drafting the Anticybersquatting Consumer Protection Act and to provide testimony before the Senate in support of the Act.

Greg is an Adjunct Professor of Law at Brigham Young University, teaching courses in trademark and copyright law.
